Where Do NFTs Get Their Value From?

NFTs get their value from four parameters:

- Utility Value
- Identity of the Creator
- Future Valuation
- Liquidity
Utility Value

- Depends on how the token can be used. Attractive use cases always increase the value.
- Ability to use the NFT in another application, that means interoperability between various platforms makes the token lucrative.
- Partnership with other businesses.
Identity of the Creator

- NFTs that comes from a famous company or artist increases the value significantly.
- Media hype around a NFT always results in high selling price.
- Reselling NFTs owned by influential people can increase the value.
Highly depends on the trend and future predictions around a certain NFT.

The scarcity of supply of the NFT drives increases the value.

It depends on the speculation of future cash flow and brand value.
High liquidity always results in a higher value of an NFT.

Use of popular ERC standards such as ERC 721 and ERC 1155 increases the liquidity of the NFT.

High trading volume of a certain NFT category attracts investors, which translates to a high value.
